

Subject: Draft 2023 Consumer Products Survey Data Webinar

The California Air Resources Board (CARB) will host a public webinar to present and discuss the Draft 2023 Consumer Products Survey Data and accompanying supplemental materials. During the webinar, CARB staff will highlight key observations from the draft dataset, explain how the data will be used to support upcoming program activities, and outline areas where stakeholder input is especially valuable. CARB welcomes comments and encourages participants to share feedback on data completeness, category-level results, and any insights about dataset representation.

This webinar will be conducted via Zoom:

Date: June 2, 2026

Time: 10:00 a.m. - 12:00 p.m. PDT

Background

CARB's Consumer Products Program plays a central role in reducing smog forming volatile organic compounds (VOCs), toxic air contaminants, and greenhouse gases released from chemically formulated consumer products used throughout California. Implementation of CARB's Consumer Products Regulations has achieved an estimated 50 percent reduction in VOCs since 1990 compared to uncontrolled levels. The 2023 Consumer and Commercial Products Survey is an important step in continuing this progress. The survey collected sales and chemical formulation data for 37 categories of consumer, commercial, and institutional products during the 2023 calendar year, including those used by households, service and government facilities, and industrial operations. Information gathered through the survey will support California's consumer product emissions inventory, speciation profiles for air quality modeling, future rulemakings, risk assessments, and development of State Implementation Plans. The 2023 survey began on December 3, 2024, and the reporting deadline was April 8, 2025.
