Comment:

I would like to formally register my support for the proposed changes that will ensure California continues to uphold high standards for emissions. It is critical that we continue to advance fuel economy and clean air efforts in order to decrease the effects of fossil fuel emissions on our climate.

Comment:

I fully support the Air Resources Board's amendment to ensure that any federal rollback of vehicle emission standards does not apply to California vehicles. California's emission standards have resulted in cleaner air statewide and continue to reduce greenhouse gas emissions affecting climate change. There is no benefit to rolling back emissions targets.

Comment:

I think rolling back the proposed standards is a good idea. My background is with automobiles. I know you have to burn a certain amount of fuel to power a vehicle. especially the big SUV's that people buy today. I want clean air and higher fuel mileage too, but the only way I feel we can do that in the next few years is hybrids or all electric. This technology is very expensive and this just forces vehicle prices higher and puts them(cars) out of reach of the average family. This forces people to drive older vehicles that pollute more and are less safe. You are going to force a showdown between your state and the federal government and auto makers. then we, the consumers will be the big losers.

Climate change is accelerating due to greenhouse gas emissions. Massive fires in our state are being triggered by climate change . California needs to be the leader in reducing greenhouse gasses and fighting climate change. We as a State need to fight back against the current Washington administration's war on science and their Medival and ignorant claims that climate change does not exist and it is a Chinese hoax.

We need to continue to promote and protect California's ability to set emissions that are lower than federal standards. We escalating climate change and relentless fires which produce significant carbon pollution, it is imperative to lower fuel emissions from vehicles. The combination of continued fires and an increase in air pollution from lower car emission standards would be a fatal combination for millions of Californians .

Comment:

Automakers and its advocates such as the Alliance of Automobile Manufacturers want one national set of rules for both emissions and greenhouse gases. Without a national regulatory framework, the California-led states, which together account for about one-third of the U.S. new vehicle market, could create a separate market, raising complexity and costs for the industry. I'm writing in support of your proposed amendments to the Low-Emission Vehicle III Greenhouse Gas Emission Regulation. We must, at all costs, protect our own stringent standards against attack by Trump's EPA.

Comment:

I support your proposed amendments to the Low-Emission Vehicle III Greenhouse Gas Emission Regulation. Car companies and their lobbyists such as the Alliance of Automobile Manufacturers are pushing for a single national set of rules for both emissions and greenhouse gases. If they are successful, it will be vital for California and other states who share our concerns (and which represent about one-third of the market for new cars in the U.S.), to create a separate market, raising complexity and costs for the industry unless they voluntarily meet the higher California-complying standards. California must maintain its stringent standards against efforts by Trump's EPA to weaken the requirements.
