First Name: Keith

Last Name: Foszcz

Email Address: kfoszcz@sonoma-county.org

Affiliation: County of Sonoma DTPW

Subject: Third Party Verification

Comment:

The County of Sonoma operates a large landfill including stationary combustion with electricity generation. Our only source of fuel is landfill gas so all our emissions are from biomass. The proposed changes are for alignment with EPA but also to support cap and trade. Since all our emissions are from biomass we do not fall under cap and trade. ARB's proposed changes include going to an annual verification where EPA does not even require third party verification. Would ARB consider having an exemption for biomass CO2 emissions and require only triennial verification?

Subject: Economic Opportunities for Small Businesses Under AB 32

Comment:

Small Business Majority released an in-depth report on Oct. 18, 2010, that focuses on the opportunities AB 32 provides to California's small businesses. The findings show that the increased investments, energy savings and innovation prompted by the law's requirements will boost small businesses' bottom lines and stimulate job creation. It will increase demand for the goods and services California small businesses provide, which will benefit the state as a whole. The report concludes that the economic potential AB 32 creates for small businesses is substantial.

Doing this at this time would be bad for business. The economy is just starting to turn around. Why risk scaring away potential businesses that might want to come to California? Why make it more difficult for current businesses to grow?

Stop this. Wait until unemployment is below 5% and then work on emissions.

Calera Corporation welcomes the opportunity to comment on the California Air Resources Board's (ARB) proposed revisions to California's mandatory greenhouse gas (GHG) emission reporting rule. Calera is an innovative carbon capture firm based in Los Gatos, California. At our demonstration plant in Moss Landing, California, we capture carbon dioxide emissions from the flue gas of an operating power plant and convert the carbon dioxide (CO₂) to carbonate (CO₃) forms. We are developing processes for cost-effectively producing both mineral carbonates for building materials—such as cement—and bicarbonates for products and/or geologic reinjection. In either case, this conversion to solid or liquid carbonate forms would be stable and not revert to carbon dioxide under anything short of apocalyptic temperature and acidity conditions.

The Governor, the California legislature, and the ARB are to be commended for taking a leadership role in the important mission of reducing GHGs and lessening man's adverse impact on global climate systems. This program promises to be a model for compliance mechanisms in other states and in the federal governments of the United States and abroad. For that reason, Calera would like to suggest a few changes that will make the regulation even more forward thinking and supportive of innovation, particularly innovative technologies born in the State.

The most effective way of maintaining stable levels of atmospheric GHG concentrations is to prevent emissions from entering the atmosphere. This can be done in one of two ways: by using less energy and energy-intensive products, or by producing energy and goods in ways that result in lower emissions. Calera's process would enable the use of domestic fossil fuel resources to create energy without the conventionally attendant GHG emissions. Unlike traditional carbon capture and storage (CCS), carbon conversion does not simply store captured CO₂ and transport it to a storage facility. It is instead a means of avoiding CO₂ emissions by converting the gas to a carbonate solid or liquid state, which is no longer a greenhouse gas and will not revert to one.

Calera therefore urges the ARB to revise the mandatory reporting rule so that major emission sources in the State of California are required to report only GHG emissions that leave their plant premises. Greenhouse gases emitted directly to the atmosphere from the facility or transported out in carbon dioxide or other GHG forms should be reported as emissions. While carbon dioxide that is captured on-site before it exits the stack and subsequently converted non-GHG chemical forms—such as carbonate—should not be part of the source's emission profile. The source would therefore not require matching these would-be emissions with allowances or offsets.

The rule should treat on-site carbon conversion equipment as back-end equipment. Any energy demand from the carbon conversion equipment should be treated as part of the power plant's net emission profile.

Calera would like to meet with ARB staff early in 2011 to discuss our processes and changes in the rule in more detail, but it is important that the reporting rule encourage innovations that convert greenhouse gases to stable non-GHG forms. Specifically, Calera suggests the following language changes to the Proposed Amendments to the Regulation for the Mandatory Reporting of Greenhouse Gas Emissions:

§ 95101 (f) Exclusions – add subsection (6) “Carbon dioxide or other greenhouse gases that are captured onsite at covered units and chemically converted to stable non-GHG forms, such as carbonates.”

§ 95102 (a) Definitions – add a subsection for the following definition: “ ‘Carbon conversion’ means the generally permanent conversion of carbon dioxide to non-GHG forms, such as carbonate, calcium carbonate, magnesium carbonate, bicarbonate, and other stable chemicals that are not greenhouse gases and will not readily revert to GHG forms.”

§ 95102 (a) (156) – add the following language to the end of the current definition for “greenhouse gas emission reduction”: “...and shall include chemical conversion of greenhouse gases to stable non-GHG forms.”

The theory, and it never was more than a theory, that the earth is warming abnormally has been thoroughly debunked and those who sought to take advantage of it have changed it to climate change. since there is no global warming CO2 emissions could not have caused it. The Agenda 21 forces, hopefully, will be rejected as soon as the public learns what is happening to them.

Sadly, this fiction, has been codified in California and it is your job to reduce carbon emissions; a pointless exercise. Do us a favor abandon this folly.

Subject: GHG MRR Section 95153(v) - Produced Water Dissolved CO2

Comment:

Regarding Section 95153(v) - Produced Water Dissolved CO2:

1. The first line says: "Produced Water Dissolved CO2. The operator must calculate dissolved CO2 and CH4 in produced water as follows:" The remainder of the section does not mention CH4. Are CH4 emissions required to be reported or not?

2. Item (3) provides an exemption for "EOR operations that route produced water from separation directly to re-injection into the hydrocarbon reservoir in a closed loop system without any leakage to atmosphere".

a. Section 95102(a)(128) appears to define "EOR" to include water flooding. Is this a correct interpretation?

b. Since no system is 100% leak free 100% of the time, what is the definition of "a closed loop system without any leakage to the atmosphere"? Can such a system include a water storage or surge tank that is connected to a typical oilfield vapor recovery system upstream of the re-injection pumps (and which may vent to atmosphere via a pressure relief valve when process conditions are abnormal)? Does a system ((even if it does not include any tanks) qualify if it has an occasional leak (e.g., water with dissolved gases dripping from a valve stem or flange)?

Subject: GHG Reporting / Definition of Fluorinated greenhouse gas

Comment:

3M recognizes that the definition of fluorinated ghg is consistent with the U.S. EPA definition and that both definitions exempt materials with a vapor pressure of less than 1 mmHg at 25C. Please be aware that the vapor pressure threshold in this definition raised concerns because EPA also defined, "heat transfer fluids" and tied the definition of a heat transfer fluid to the definition of a fluorinated ghg. The concern, simply stated, is that heat transfer fluids are used at elevated temperatures so their vapor pressures at 25C are not indicative of emission potential. EPA has recently proposed amending the definition of a heat transfer fluid to address this concern. EPA's proposal is attached (pg 56022). 3M calls CARB's attention to this issue in the event CARB, in the future, also defines heat transfer fluid.

We do not understand your authority over 40 CFR Parts 75 and Parts 98.

We do not understand the regulatory agency over such data as the law appears to really be the Clean Air Act.
