BACKGROUND

On October 15, 2008, U.S. EPA adopted a revised national ambient air quality standard for lead. The lead standard was lowered 90 percent, from 1.5 micrograms per cubic meter ($\mu\text{g}/\text{m}^3$) to $0.15 \mu\text{g}/\text{m}^3$. When U.S. EPA adopts a new standard or, as in the case of lead, revises an existing standard, one of the first steps in the planning process is a determination of whether the state has sufficient resources, programs, and authority to implement the standard. The federal Clean Air Act refers to these collectively, as the necessary "infrastructure." The formal documentation is set forth in an Infrastructure SIP and constitutes a revision to California's overall SIP.

Specific Infrastructure SIP requirements are specified in Clean Air Act Section 110. Examples of infrastructure include programs to monitor air quality and authority to adopt, implement, and enforce regulations. The overarching framework or infrastructure for California's air quality programs is well established and has been documented in previous Infrastructure SIP submittals. The proposed Infrastructure SIP for lead is specific to the 2008 federal lead standard and is due to U.S. EPA October 15, 2011.

PROPOSED ACTION

ARB staff prepared a Staff Report entitled, "Proposed State Implementation Plan Revision for Federal Lead Standard Infrastructure Requirements" released August 23, 2011. The Staff Report documents State and district resources, programs, and authority to implement the basic requirements needed to ensure implementation, maintenance, and enforcement of the 2008 federal lead standard. Among the items the Infrastructure SIP addresses are the ability to monitor and report emissions and air quality data, the authority to adopt and enforce regulations and programs designed to protect public health, and provisions to provide opportunity for input and review by affected entities and the public. These items provide the "infrastructure" needed to achieve and maintain healthful air quality.

Most of these Infrastructure SIP elements were addressed in California's comprehensive Infrastructure SIP, submitted in response to the federal Clean Air Act of 1970 and approved by U.S. EPA in 1979 (40 Code of Federal Regulations Part 52.220). This submittal for the 2008 federal lead standard continues to affirm ARB's commitment to comply with the infrastructure requirements. In addition, the lead Infrastructure SIP responds to new elements and commitments required by the 2008 federal lead standard. Changes required for the 2008 lead standard are limited in scope and include affirming our ability to comply with new monitoring and permitting requirements, as well as committing to comply with any future SIP revisions required under the Clean Air Act.
